Brad Munger has seen service delivery networks in a variety of settings and from multiple perspectives, from inpatient, outpatient, to the streets. As a licensed professional counselor, he has worked in both private and public sectors for about 30 years with a range of responsibilities including psychological evaluation to direct treatment and clinical/administrative supervision in a broad array of programs within the Wisconsin mental health system. In his current role with DHS, Brad is the technical consultant and contract manager for several areas, including Crisis Intervention.

In these capacities and assisting in the preparation of the new state suicide prevention strategy, Brad works diligently on suicide prevention. He provides training workshops under the American Association of Suicidology and Suicide Prevention Resource Center. Most recently, Brad is working as a geropsychological and crisis consultant on the current department initiative, Wisconsin Dementia Care System Redesign.

Jesse Dirkman is the Data Analyst for the Institute for Community Alliances (ICA). She is also a member of the WI Balance of State Board of Directors.

Scott Webb is a trauma survivor himself who has worked in the behavioral health field for 30 years. His career has included clinical, administrative and consultative work. Prior to his position with the State of Wisconsin Department of Health Services, Scott worked for a national employee assistance firm managing a national book business providing onsite trauma response services across the United States. Scott is currently the State Trauma Informed Coordinator. He holds a Master of Science in Education degree from the University of Wisconsin-Oshkosh and is a licensed clinical social worker.
